Methodology

In 1998, the County Information Project published a report showing those Texas counties using the unit road system. In 2003, the CIP conducted an unrelated survey on which there was a question asking if the county had a unit road system. This document compares the findings from the survey with the previous report.

Since the survey as a whole was not related to county roads, there were a number of counties that did not answer this question. No follow up calls were made to contact the counties that did not answer the unit road system question.

Unit Road System as of 2003

As part of a survey conducted by the County Information Project in 2003, County Judges were asked if their counties operated under the unit road system. This list included those counties that responded "yes" regardless of any uncertainties that may have been included.

Unit Road System as of 1998, Current Status Unknown

If the county was reported to have the unit road system on the CIP's 1998 report, 'Unit Road System Counties' but either did not answer this question on the 2003 survey or answered "I don't know", then they are included on this list.

No Longer have Unit Road System Since 1998 Report

If the county was reported to have the unit road system on the CIP's 1998 report, 'Unit Road System Counties' but responded on the survey that they no longer have a unit road system, then they are included on this list. The approximate year the county stopped using the unit road system is included.

No Longer have Unit Road System, Not included on the 1998 Report

If the county was not reported to have had the unit road system on the CIP's 1998 report, 'Unit Road System Counties' and responded on the survey that they no longer have a unit road system, then they are included on this list. The approximate year the county stopped using the unit road system is included.
